RESEARCH INTERESTS

I am a terrestrial ecologist focused on edaphology or how soil influences plant pattern and process. I am interested in plant-microbe interactions, biogeography, and ecological change in managed and marginal environments.

ACADEMIC POSITIONS

Research Associate. Department of Soil Science, University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, SK. Advisors: Drs. Bobbi Helgason and Steven Siciliano. 2017–Present

- As part of a Canada First Research Excellence Funded project, Plant Phenotyping and Imaging Research Centre (P²IRC), I explore novel means of isolating ecologically important microbial taxa in soil microbiomes. See publications 22, 24, and submitted manuscripts 1–3, 5.

Program Coordinator. Department of Soil Science, University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, SK. Advisor: Dr. Steven Siciliano. 2017–Present

- As part of the NSERC CREATE in Sustainable Applied Fertilizer Remediation (SAFER), I am responsible for the coordination of the training program structure and content.

Postdoctoral Research Fellow. Department of Soil Science, University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, SK. Advisor: Dr. Steven Siciliano. 2015–2017

- Here I study how microbes interact along plant invasion gradients and track ecologically active microbial communities in natural and anthropogenically disturbed sites. See publications 10, 13, 16, 18, and 19.

Lecturer. Department of Soil Science, University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, SK Fall 2015, Winter 2019-20

- Winter 2019–2020: Multivariate Statistics. Provides training in multivariate approaches used in microbial and soil science experiments. Topics include metric and non-metric ordination analysis, techniques used to assess environmental gradients or treatment effects, and non-ordination approaches.
- Fall 2015: First-Year Research Experience (FYRE) Program. I taught Renewable Resources and Environment, which introduced students to renewable resources and their management, with emphasis on human use of surface water, groundwater, land and plant resources.

Garfield Weston Postdoctoral Fellow. Cross-appointment between the Biology Department and Global Institute for Water Security, University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, SK. Advisor: Dr. Jill Johnstone. 2012–2015

- I quantified how plant growth and demographics responded to climate along environmental gradients at the northern and southern limits of the boreal forest. See publications 6, 8, 9, and 11.

COMMUNITY OUTREACH AND MEDIA

Canadian Geographic published an article on implications of permafrost thaw, which includes some tidbits from an interview I gave on the subject (Canadian Geographic, 2 January 2019). Under National Geographic's Changing Planet blog, my Earthwatch colleague Alix Morris authored a post on my research in Churchill, Manitoba, in December 2017. I recently contributed to a review article on the changing boreal forest entitled "The Great Global Species Shakeup" in the Toronto Star in December 2017. In December 2017, I participated in a live stream as part of International Mountain Day hosted by the Canadian Mountain Network. Earthwatch published a multimedia story based on my research in Churchill entitled "Trees in the Tundra" in April 2015. National Geographic Explorer published an article in March 2015 based on citizen scientist research through my partnership with Earthwatch International. In 2013, I co-organized and implemented field research activities for 'Schools on Board / Schools on Tundra' in Churchill, MB—a two-week field course introducing 15 high school students to ecological concepts, field methods, and data analysis. From 2003-present, I led over 300 Earthwatch International citizen scientists through fieldwork, lectures, and workshops on environmental change in the Subarctic. I lectured students on arctic research at Camino Nuevo Middle School in Los Angeles, CA, during 2009. In 2008, CBC Radio North interviewed me on arctic 'citizen science'.
